Elements also comes with a free photo and video editor, a live image stabilizer, web browser, various filters, an animated GIF recorder, and more. Elements is at the top of the Photoshop lineup for at-home editing. If you want to go beyond the standard tools and create advanced graphics in your file, look for the "professional" versions. They include more features that allow you to create images with complex lighting, blend elements together, remove shadows and reduce noise. However, for casual tinkering, Elements will do just fine. You can also use both versions for a seamless transition. Adobe Photoshop Elements also comes in both single and multi-user editions. If you have two or more people working on the same photo and you don't want to have to worry about one person's work interfering with another person's, multi-user is a better choice. It has fewer features than the single-user, but it means your images will be more organized, as you won't end up with a mishmash of edits and different people's work. With free editions, the learning curve is more gradual. However, the more sophisticated features are not available. If you want to learn the most advanced stuff you can do with Photoshop, you'll need to upgrade to one of the paid versions. Use Elements for a good old-fashioned or even a high-quality photo editor. Create new photographs, edit old ones, and play with the settings. If you're looking for something a little different, you can create Flash animations or animated GIFs. We'll also talk about where to learn how to animate with Photoshop. Elements 9 - Best Elements Adobe Photoshop Elements 9 is a streamlined and more user-friendly version of Adobe Photoshop. It contains all the features found in the professional version of Photoshop. You can use Elements 9 for your everyday photo editing and creative projects. There are a lot of features, so it will take a while to get the hang of it. It's more of a work in progress, since Adobe is still finding ways to make the product even better. Elements 9 does have the most tools for making pretty things. Those looking for the right combination of speed and features need to stick with the paid version. The free version does contain a lot of tools, so you'll learn a lot in your first few months with it. Elements 9 can be used with a normal computer or with a Mac. It will 388ed7b0c7

Q: Javascript Point is not persisting I have an app where I have 4 canvas objects. Each canvas object is added to the body element of the DOM. Each canvas object is a child of another canvas object named "canvas-subcanvas". When the user clicks on one canvas object, I want a div, which is currently a child of the canvas-subcanvas element to show on the screen. This works by creating a new div and moving the div as the user drags the canvas object. Everything up until this point works perfectly. However, I want the div to remain on the screen no matter what they do on the canvas. I am getting a "point is not persisting" error in my console when I drag my canvas object. Here is my full code snippet: var _x = 0; var _y = 0; var _divLocationX = 0; var _divLocationY = 0; $("body").on("mousedown", function(event) { _x = event.pageX - this.offsetLeft; _y = event.pageY - this.offsetTop; $('#canvas-subcanvas').on('mousemove', function(event) { _divLocationX = event.pageX - this.offsetLeft; _divLocationY = event.pageY - this.offsetTop; }); $(event.target).on('mouseup', function(event) { $(event.target).hide(); }); }); $("body").on("mousemove", function(event) { var rect = document.getElementById("canvas-subcanvas"); if (rect) { var div = document.createElement("div"); div.style.position = "absolute"; div.style.left = _divLocationX; div.style.top = _divLocationY; div.id = "div-location"; div.style.cursor = "pointer"; div.onmouseover = function()

Ask HN: If your company ever wants to sponsor a user-run conference, what would it take? - norml One of our current strategies is to give back to the community. We want to be a part of things that truly matter to our users. We know this is a difficult community to be a part of so we are taking a different tack: instead of sponsoring, why not sponsor a user run conference that actually makes a difference? We like the idea of open source, user run conferences. That makes for a cool, worthwhile, friendly atmosphere. It also helps that many of our users and customers are technically savvy, tend to be good leaders, and have a keen desire to share their ideas and solutions with others. So, what would it take for a user run conference to get our company to step up and sponsor it? In short, what are the things we want to see and feel involved with?I am not trying to come up with a detailed plan for the conference. I want to see what would make us want to get out of our comfort zone and sponsor it. I am also trying to allow our users to design it.Ideas include a user run conference for the cloud computing industry, an open source mobile phone app conference, and a user run conference that leverages the community spirit around open source development. Each of these I consider interesting, and each of them could be a success depending on how many people volunteer to run the conference and how they sell it. I am looking for discussion around these ideas. ====== proexploit I've been looking for people to fund a development conference for FOSS and I hope to have one planned for August 2011 to coincide with the Symantec Symposium. It would be just about editing code and talking about how to get it done in a manner that is understandable to a non-developer audience.
